

About Kevin Robertson

Kevin Robertson serves as Director of Security at Saddleback Church. He is a pastor and former police officer, with executive protection work experience. In his role, Kevin has served as security director for events both small and large and in August, 2008, served as security coordinator for the Civil Forum held at Saddleback with Senators McCain and Obama as guests. That event included a multi-agency team of over 300 personnel. Kevin's experience and training allow him to look at security issues that affect both large multi-venue churches as well as the small local church.

Kevin's philosophy of security is that all security personnel are there to minister first and provide security second. Security personnel must know how to minister and provide security in any situation to which they are called.
